WELCOME TO OCHO RIOS, JAMAICA

The island of Jamaica was "discovered" by Christopher Columbus in 1494, on his second voyage to the new world. The first Spanish settlement was established in 1509, but the Spaniards were so disappointed by the island's lack of gold that they surrendered the island to the invading British fleet in 1655. Under the British, the island became a base for Henry Morgan's pirate fleet and Jamaica became known as a sort of bargain bazaar. But in 1692, "the wickedest city in Christendom" was wiped out by earthquakes and tidal waves. By 1730, however, Jamaica had reestablished itself as the largest sugar-producing colony in the world. Located as it is at the crossroads of several major sea trade routes, the island soon became involved in the more profitable slave trade, and almost one million black slaves passed through here before the trade was abolished in 1807. The plantation system collapsed when slavery itself was abolished in 1838, but it is from these African Afro-European slaves and traders that 95% of the current population descend, explaining the Jamaican motto: "Out of Many, One People".

Jamaica became a crown colony in 1866 and an independent parliamentary state within The Commonwealth in 1962. It now has a democratic government run by a Prime Minister and his cabinet, along with a Senate and House of Representatives elected every five years. It is the third largest of the Caribbean islands and English is the official language, although you may hear the local Creole patois dialect spoken around town.

In addition, we recycle other items that cost to do so. This includes batteries, florescent lights, oily waste and silver from photo developing.
